it is undisputed that minnesota and louisiana tort law require a drug manufacturer that is or should be aware of its product's danger to label that product in a way that renders it reasonably safe antibiotics (much of which is passed to us from meat through the antibiotics fed to farm animals) destroy this bacterial flora in the intestinal tract, leaving the yeast an opportunity to overgrow